Preparing athletes for the (delayed) Tokyo Games / Jonathan Smith

Explore how psychology is being used to enable Paralympic GB athletes and staff to thrive in Tokyo. We will understand how the mind works and how this knowledge is being practically applied in the build up to the Games.

Jonathan is interested in how to use psychological principles to help people change their own lives. He has applied this knowledge working with professional and Olympic athletes and coaches.

Why sex is fun but gender rarely is... / Dany Nobus

Discover the place of gender (sexual identity and role) in the broader framework of the human sexual experience. For human beings gender is a complex and often contested repository of psycho-social forces, which isn't always easy to navigate.

Dany Nobus is Professor of Psychoanalytic Psychology at Brunel University London and the former Chair of the Freud Museum.
